Chair, as seen in 2002, with Scone, which has been returned to Scotland, is not installed coronation chairs, known historically as the St Edward's Chair or King Edward's Chair, is an ancient wooden chair [and] [clarification needed] on which British monarchs sit when they are invested with regalia and crowned at their coronation. In 1296, it was commissioned by King Edward I to include the coronation stone of Scotland - known as the Stone of Destiny - which was captured from the Scots who held it in Scone Abbey. The chair was named after Edward the confessant, and was previously held at his shrine in Westminster Abbey. The history of Stone Scone in the coronation chair at Westminster Abbey, an 1859 High-backed, Gothic-style chair was carved out of oak at some point between the summer of 1297 and March 1300 by carpenter Walter Durham. [2] At first the king ordered that the chair be made of bronze, but he changed his mind and decided that it should be made of wood. [3] The chair is the oldest dated piece of English furniture by a well-known artist. [4] Since the 14th [7] Monarchs used to sit on the stone Scone itself until in the 17th [4] Gilded Lions added in the 16th all were replaced in 1727. One of the four lions was given a new head for the coronation of George IV in 1821. The chair itself was originally gilded, painted and shelled with glass mosaics, the footprints of which are visible when checking the chair, especially on the back, where the outlines of leaves, birds and animals managed to survive. [8] The lost image of the king, perhaps Edward the confessor or Edward I, with his feet resting on the lion was also painted on the back. [9] Today, its appearance is aged and brittle wood. In the 19th century, tourists could sit on a chair for a small payment to one of the vergers. [10] Early tourists and choirboys of the Abbey carved their initials and other graffiti into chairs, and corner posts were acutely damaged by souvenir hunters. [11] Sir Gilbert Scott, the Gothic architect of revival and antiquariate, described the chair as a wonderful piece of decoration but sadly crippled. On June 11, 1914, at 5:40 p.m., the chair was the subject of a bombing believed to have been orchestrated by the Suffragettes. The corner of the chair broke off in the explosion. Although it was strong enough to shake the walls of the abbey and loud enough to be heard from inside the Houses of Parliament, none of the 70 people in the abbey were injured at the time and the Crown President was faithfully restored. [3] During the eight centuries of its existence, the chair was removed from Westminster Abbey only twice. He was first at the ceremony at Westminster Hall when Oliver Cromwell was listed as lord protector England, and the second during The Second World War, when it was moved to Gloucester Cathedral throughout the war. [9] On Christmas Eve 1950, The Scottish Nationalists break into the Abbey and remove the Stone of Scone. It was restored in time for the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II in 1953. In 1996, the stone was returned to Scotland, where it is held at Edinburgh Castle on the condition that it be returned to England for use in the coronation. [4] The coronation chair is highly protected, and leaves its safe place—on a pedesh in St. George's Chapel in the pelvis—only when it is edging into the Coronation Theatre near the High Altar Abbey. Between 2010 and 2012, the chair was cleaned and restored by a team of experts with full public view of the abbey. [12] Other chairs used in the coronation of the Coronation Chair (centre right) and throne (lower centre) at the coronation of Elizabeth II. Other chairs are also used during the coronation ceremony. The chairmen of the Estate for the Sovereign and consortium are located on the south side of the shrine, and these are used during the first part of the liturgy, before the sovereign anointing and crowning with the crown of St. Edward. Then, for a part of the service called enthronement, and for the homage that follows, the monarch is placed not in the coronation chair, but on the throne on the dais in the middle of the transept. On occasions when the king's wife is crowned – the royal consortium – a similar throne is granted to her so that she can sit next to the king, but at a lower level. [13] Unlike coronation chairs, these additional chairs and thrones tend to be new for each coronation. Then they were often placed in the throne room of the royal palaces. The Chairman of the 1953 Coronation Estate is in the throne room of Buckingham Palace, together with President George VI. [15] The throne of 1953 is held in the garter throne room of Windsor Castle; Thrones of King Edward VII. [17] Those of George V and Queen Mary can be seen in the throne room at The Palace of Holyroodhouse in Edinburgh.
